FACTS:

Man established a relationship with the horse some 50,000 years ago. While Cro-Magnon man admired the beauty of the horse, he primarily considered it a source of food. Lacking the means of effectively pursuing the horse or killing it from a distance, the prehistoric hunter had to seek other ways to kill his prey. Evidence of this is found at Salutre in France, where there is a site with the bones of some 10,000 horses which were run over a cliff by Cro-Magnon hunters.
