STOCK ART

FACTS:

The first documentary evidence of alcoholic beverages was written in Sumerian around 3200 BC, most certainly concerns beer rather than wine production and employs a specific pictograph for beer itself - an outline of a clay vessel marked with short, diagonal lines. The clarity of such pictographs indicates that beer was, by this time, commonplace and that the brewing process had been developed at a considerably earlier period in Mesopotamia. (Mandelbaum, 1965).
